

IN THE WORLD OF IMAGES

Looking back at the Covid-19 pandemic

How to do it?

1. Think about the events of recent weeks and remember the images that have stuck in your memory. It can be photos from social networks, shots from TV or your own photos from a mobile phone.
2. Choose one specific image that symbolises what is happening around the Covid-19 pandemic and insert it in the box in the middle of the attachment. You can either work with printed materials or open the attachment in a graphic editor and insert the photo in an electronic form.
3. Complete the image with a text. Say in words why you have chosen the image. Try to capture what makes photography so telling. Words can be written by hand or in a graphic editor.
4. Show the result to others (for example on social networks) and talk to them about which other images they consider adequate.

You may have noticed that one image can express more than a thousand words. It can be a drawing, painting, professional photography or a seemingly ordinary picture taken on a mobile phone. Using an image, we can communicate with others and share with them what we feel. We can also use the image to recall memories and reflect on the events we have experienced. Let's try it then, and let's look back with an image at the Covid-19 pandemic!
