The images around us speak to us and we are learning to read them. How to do it? Look at the photos and think about their meaning. What do they capture? What story are they telling us? What do they express? If you can't associate any of the images with anything specific, search for it on the Internet and find out more about the context in which the photo was made. And then write at least 3 words for each picture, which would express your feeling about the photo or the situation it captures.

What do the images have in common?
How would you name the series of these photos?

I'm fascinated that one picture has the ability to tell so many things! Only 3 words will probably not be enough ...

It would be interesting to talk about where the power of the image lies. Is it in the thing it captures, or in the way the photo has been taken?
